“Nearly 22 players were outfitted with Motion Capture suits and 26 minutes of high-intensity, real-life action was captured by our technical wizards,” said Alex Bono, executive producer of FIFA. “This is the most detailed and authentic game you can play, and it’s available on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC.” We met up with senior producer Andrew Hellier, to see how HyperMotion Technology has come to life in Fifa 22 Cracked Version. FIFA 22 on PS4 and PC is now available for pre-purchase at all major retailers in the US and Canada. PlayStation.Blog: What is the goal of this exercise? Andrew Hellier: The goal is to recreate the authentic football experience while keeping players in the ball, movement in the ball and the level of aggression that is inherent to the sport. What’s the process behind putting this together? Did you film the players training? We started with player analysis, which is an important precursor to creating authentic performance. We needed to set performance markers for acceleration, speed, aggression and power. Once we had that, we did player training, which was a mix of the training sessions of actual players, with game play. We recorded all that, and overlaid it to see how it all jibed together. What did you learn about your players? We were really able to pick up on various things. Acceleration and speed were the first things we looked at. They were a bit slower than the players from the previous game, but it’s a fair amount of data. We ended up with a variety of speeds. We had four different speed values. We ended up with a good spread. Speed is really important to players in the sport. It’s about getting to the ball quickly and with power, kind of the nth degree of speed. We also saw that players have that nth degree of speed in different parts of the field. FIFA 19 had a good spread of acceleration, speed and power. This is the first time we’ve really had some good metrics in that particular area. This is the first time you can really simulate how the players on the field behave from the ball up. [FIFA 22] has a slightly bigger foot print than [FIFA 19]. When you play [FIFA 19], there are little pockets where you can rest on the pitch.

What's New Added More Depth to AI to Make Behaving Better Teams Individuals on a team don't just follow their own instructions, they also contribute to the larger team strategy. By using deep learning algorithms and a new AI component, we were able to integrate that into gameplay. This is a great way for teams to communicate and develop realtime strategy. Transitioning to New Engine In order to take advantage of a new AI system, we had to make an architectural change to the engine. Some gameplay changes were made as a result of the transition. New AI Team Behaviors We have added a core set of team behavior behaviors: attack, defense, set piece and ball possessions. We've also developed a suite of more advanced team behaviors including tactics and formations. In addition, for the first time teams can deviate from their instructions at any time by encouraging or discouraging the player. Player Behavior We've added a new system to change player behavior based on a crowd. Players can be encouraged to run more when their team is in trouble or discourage the players when their team is doing well. These behaviors can be triggered by different levels of crowd integration and have different severity levels. Added Carrington Carvajal FIFA pro gamers like to say there is no one better in the world at FIFA than Carrington Carvajal. He has famously played an entire match with a broken foot. Even after breaking it, he kept playing and managed to pull off some impressive dribbles. We got to work to build a healthy Carrington character that takes inspiration from real-world sports and Carrington's own story. Learn more about the individual Carrington, his skills and the story of his FIFA career. Features Timed Instant Tactical Action Skill on the ball remains the top focus of the controls, but now we've added more velocity and precision to them. Timed instant tactical actions make it easier to achieve ball possession. FIFA 20 Goals Showcased in the FIFA 20 Pitch Experience VR Journey trailer, the new
